Capim de Angola.

A load of grass being carried into the town of Bom Fim from the adjacent valley where it is grown. In the state of Bahia Angola grass, or capim de Angola, as it is known in Portuguese, is one of the commonest and most highly esteemed forage crops. It is fed to both horses and cattle. While generally grown on low wet ground near the coast, in the interior it is often seen on comparatively dry land. Photograph by P. H. Dorsett, Bom Fim, state of Bahia, Brazil, February 25, 1914, No. 2079.
